

Wild Scilly

Many attractions on Scilly focus around the spectacular natural environment. Take in splendid coastal walks or bathe in crystal clear waters. Loose yourself in sub-tropical gardens, enjoy watching the constantly changing seascapes and enormous skies. Listen to birds chatter and waves crash and ask yourself if there is really is anything better than this?

Fields and hedgerows blaze with colour throughout the year in the Isles of Scilly. Bright pink South African proteas dazzle in May, wild flowers are on parade from June onwards and beautiful agapanthuses around each corner make Scilly a wildlife lover's paradise.

The islands' maritime microclimate makes it a haven for unusual flora and fauna. Frost and snow occur extremely seldom, which enables gardeners to import exotic species from all over the globe, making the average walk in the islands a voyage of discovery past plants from the Canaries, South Africa, South America, Australia and New Zealand.

On Scilly our common philosophy is to treat our home as your home, we feel that visiting with respect earns respect. By behaving responsibly we are calling ourselves and our visitors to account for their environmental, social and economic impacts both positive and negative. AITO (Association of Independent Tour Operators) have drawn up guidelines to help you holiday responsibly in the Isles of Scilly.

- Protect the environment - its flora, fauna and landscapes
- Respect local cultures - traditions, religions and built heritage
- Benefit local communities - both economically and socially
- Conserve natural resources - from office to destination
- Minimise pollution - noise, waste and congestion

Our policy reiterates our passion for the islands that we love. Our natural instinct is to protect the islands that we care for and help maximise the benefit tourism can bring, all without any compromise in comfort and character for you.
